Arran joins call for COP26 global day of climate action

by Colin Smeeton editor@arranbanner.co.uk

Campaigners on Arran calling for climate justice will join thousands of people from across the world taking part in a global day of action during the UN Climate Change Conference of the Parties (COP26).

The island event, organised by Machrie resident Hilary Patrick and Sally Ann Campbell, will take place on the Brodick seafront, opposite the Douglas Hotel, on Saturday November 6 between 1pm and 1.30pm.

In response to COP26, being held from Sunday October 31 to Friday November 12 in Glasgow, a number of decentralised mass mobilisations will take place across the UK at 1pm on Saturday November 6, including on Arran and in Glasgow where tens of thousands are anticipated to make their voices heard.

Hilary said: 'People from Arran will be going to Glasgow,

'On Saturday November 6... people all over the world will be standing up for climate justice.

but not everyone feels able to take part at this time.

'So, we are going to mark the occasion here in Arran, standing in solidarity with the marchers in Glasgow and the people all over the world who need COP26 to succeed.

'On Saturday November 6, as the COP26 summit takes place, people all over the world will be standing up for climate justice.

'They want the COP26 summit to succeed and world leaders to agree meaningful steps to combat global heating. They want them to hear the voices of the people most affected by climate change.

'Please join us and show your support, bring a seat if you cannot stand. You might want to make a placard, or wear something green. But the main thing is to come and stand up for climate justice.' Hillary, who recently moved to Arran from Edinburgh, hopes that the actions will inspire politicians to show leadership and commitment and that it will serve all those whose lives are already threatened by changing weather patterns and rising sea levels.

She also hopes it will help to secure a safe future for everyone, particularly the younger generations here in the UK and around the world.

As a Quaker, Hillary has invited other Quakers to join the action and has extended an open invitation to members of the Episcopal and Catholic churches and the Church of Scotland.

However, the event on Arran will be non-denominational, non-political and open to anyone and everyone who supports the cause, regardless of any affiliations.

So far, she has received interest from many people, including ecologists and faith groups, and she hopes schools and younger people will also join in, making their voices heard.

COP26 Coalition, a UKbased civil society coalition of groups and individuals mobilising around climate justice during COP26, is expecting more than 100,000 protesters to arrive in Glasgow during the global day for climate justice on Saturday November 6.

Marchers will meet at Kelvingrove Park at noon before making their way to Glasgow Green for a 3pm show of numbers.

One of the Arran event organisers, Hilary Patrick, is calling on everyone - regardless of any affiliations - to join her on the global day for climate justice on Saturday November 6.

Speaking about the need for climate justice, a spokesperson for COP26 Coalition said, 'Global problems need global solutions

'The decisions made at COP26 will shape how governments respond - or not - to the climate crisis.

'So far, governments have done too little too late: colluding with corporations and hiding behind green washed 'solutions' that actually don't exist yet, that don't address the scale of the problem and, in many cases, rely on more exploitation of people and the planet.

'The transformative solutions we need to survive and build a more just and fair world can only be brought about through collective action, solidarity and co-ordination from our communities and international levels.

'We are bringing together movements from across the world to build power for system change - indigenous movements, frontline communities, trade unions, racial justice groups, youth strikers, landworkers, peasants, NGOs, grassroots community campaigns, feminist movements, faith groups - to name a few.

'Wherever you are in the world, now is the time to join the fight for climate justice. 'We need all hands on deck:

in workplaces, communities, schools, hospitals and across national borders.

'Join us in actions across the world so that we can be loud and clear to the world leaders discussing our future: we want climate justice now.'

COP26 Throughout the event, supporters and detractors are expected to make their voice heard with a number of actions and demonstrations.

Police Scotland has committed around 10,000 officers from across Scotland each day during the conference.

Their role will be to keep everyone safe during the most high profile and significant security and policing event ever held in the United Kingdom.

The huge operation will involve police officers from Scotland's 13 divisions and specialist resources, including firearms officers, dog handlers, mounted branch, search teams and the marine unit.

campaign for COP26

Commuters from Arran and across North Ayrshire are being urged to plan ahead when travelling to Glasgow in the run up to and during COP26.

Severe transport congestion is expected in and around the city from now.

A public awareness campaign called Get Ready Glasgow aims to provide detailed information on disruption and will be updated regularly at www.getreadyglasgow.com.

The website will provide details on alternative routes, road closure dates and where access will be maintained.

It will also include maps highlighting where and when impacts are most likely to help give the public, businesses, delegates and visitors a clearer idea of what to expect on certain days.

An estimated 5,532 commuters from across North Ayrshire make their way to Glasgow each day and along with 140 world leaders and 25,000 conference delegates expected to attend the conference at Glasgow's SEC, it is almost inevitable travel disruptions can be expected.

Planned and unplanned protests will also be inevitable. Nicola Blaney, head of events resilience at Transport Scotland, said: 'The scale of COP26 is unprecedented in terms of the impact it will have on our transport networks.

'We know that Hallowe'en weekend, Monday November 1, Tuesday November 2 and Saturday November 6, will all be particularly busy and commuters should expect severe delays.

'This is due to a combination of road closures around the SEC, including the Clydeside Expressway which closed from Saturday October 23 until Sunday November 14, and the additional demand on the network from those attending the conference.

'We'd urge everyone to stay informed and plan ahead to make the right journeys at the right times so we can keep Glasgow and the central belt moving as the region takes to the world stage for this once-in-a-lifetime event.

Get Ready Glasgow is being managed by Glasgow City Council on behalf of COP26 event delivery partners.

A similar campaign was used successfully during the 2014 Commonwealth Games and 2018 European Championships.

Denise Hamilton, head of the council's COP26 team, said: 'Glasgow has a long track record of successfully hosting major, international events.

This success is based on extensive forward planning.

'We've spent the last 18 months working to ensure that this hugely complex event goes safely and smoothly while we also keep Glasgow moving and open for business. 'This is going to be the largest gathering of world leaders the UK has ever seen. 'Making sure it is a safe and successful event for residents and visitors has meant working closely with the conference organisers and Police Scotland to agree security road closures and alternative routes

'But now we are ready. All the necessary plans are in place."

Arran Active going for gold award

Arran Active, the popular outdoor retailer in Brodick, has once again been nominated for an award in the prestigious Great Outdoors readers' awards.

Having been nominated three times, and winning a second place silver award last year, the team is now hoping to win the independent retailer category and to take home the gold award.

Arran's largest fully independent outdoor retailer is facing stiff competition though, with nine other outdoor stores - with five or fewer stores - competing for the title of Independent Retailer of the Year. Arran Active and Braemar Mountain Sports are the only two Scottish finalists with the remaining retailers all operating in England, including the Lake District where outdoor pursuits are a popular pastime.

The awards, now in their 10th year, are hosted by The Great Outdoors magazine, with all of the nominations from the various categories coming from readers.

Owner Andrew Walsh said: 'Once again we are humbled and excited in equal measure to be nominated for the TGO Independent Outdoor Retailer of the Year 2021.

'For all retailers and other businesses it has been a tricky period but we are really grateful for the support of our customers during and since lockdown.

'And to have our name put forward again by anonymous supporters is fantastic. Last year we won silver.

'This year we are going for gold!

Recognition

'But actually we are just happy to have recognition for the hard work of our wonderful staff who go above and beyond.'

The complete shortlist of all of the nominees can be found at www.tgomagazine.co.uk/ awards/reader-awards/ where people can also vote for their favourite store. Voting closes on Monday November 22, counted and the winners will when all of the votes will be be announced shortly after.

Restaurants nominated for top food honours

Two Brodick restaurants, Crofters Arran and The Wineport, have been selected as finalists in the Food Awards Scotland after being nominated by members of the public.

Making the carefully selected shortlist, Crofters Arran was nominated in the Café/ Bistro of the Year category and The Wineport was selected in the Island's Food Business of the Year category.

The Food Awards Scotland, now in its seventh year, seeks to celebrate and highlight the best in the food industry, from excellent restaurants, chefs and servers, to specialists and suppliers.

Owner of the Wineport Gina Thorborn said: 'After a busy summer, we were absolutely over the moon to find out that we had been nominated in the island category for Food Awards Scotland. 'The vast majority of our menu is made in-house so we couldn't be happier to see it appreciated like this.

We are a close team who always try to create a warm and friendly atmosphere so we are just delighted to see that effort rewarded and it has been a boost for the whole team.'

Ealána Boyle, managing director of Crofters, was unaware of the nomination but was equally delighted to hear the news.

She said: 'It was most definitely wonderful news to have been nominated and selected as finalists.

'I knew nothing about the awards and feel very humbled to have Crofters nominated.

'I have to thank the team who have all worked tirelessly to develop the business and restaurant offerings over the past six months and we are very excited about the future.' A spokesperson for The Food Awards Scotland said: 'Scotland offers a wide range of places that serve world cuisines. The finalists were voted for by the public for providing authentic recipes and unique dishes to their diners, creating memorable experiences for both residents and visitors.

'Undoubtedly, there are some amazing specialists around the country who know how to offer great service, delicious food and meet the expectations of their diners.

'These are the professionals that we aim to reward at The Food Awards Scotland 2021.

"We would like to wish all the finalists the best of luck and we can't wait to welcome all our guests and celebrate the winners with them."

The winners of the various categories, which include Restaurant of the Year, Vegan Restaurant of the Year, Bakery of the Year, Best World Cuisine and many more, will be announced at a black-tie ceremony at The Marriott Hotel in Glasgow on Monday November 29.

HIE funding gets wheels moving on motorhome site

A £64,105 project to create a motorhome site in Machrie has secured up to \pounds 32,052 from Highlands and Islands Enterprise (HIE), writes Colin Smeeton.

The motorhome site, as reported in the Banner at the start of the year, will offer motorhome users a check-in cabin, toilets and showers and waste disposal, water, free wifi and electric hook-ups.

The Kings Caves site is being developed by Arran Campers Ltd which anticipates the project will support one full-time and one part-time job and that it will contribute more than £50,000 in annual turnover to the Arran economy.

Angus Smith, managing director of Arran Campers Ltd, said: 'It was a tremendous boost to the project to receive this funding.

"The much-needed new facilities for motorhomes on the island will cater well for the growing demand for overnight stops and help the community cope better with the increasing numbers of visiting vehicles."

In the initial planning application lodged with North Ayrshire Council, a report highlighted the benefits of such a facility on Arran.

It said: 'The proposed site will provide subtle and discreet countryside accommodation for tourists visiting this area's attractions on short breaks and weekend stays.

'The proposal will also aim to alleviate the ongoing and increasing issue on the island of motorhomes pitching overnight in unsuitable/unsafe public areas.

'The site will provide a facility for these vehicles and relieve other areas from unsuitable pitching which currently presents additional burdens on existing public services and utilities.'

Morag Goodfellow, HIE area manager for Argyll and the Islands, said: 'Tourism is hugely important to our area.

'We have seen a significant increase in domestic tourism and a large element of that is campervan and motorhome holidays. 'Arran is an attractive destination for visitors and this project will enhance the island's offering, providing facilities that will help accommodate more campervan and motorhome visitors and also benefit other local businesses in a collaborative and co-operative way.

'I am delighted we have been able to provide support and look forward to seeing this new venture succeed.'

Friends of Montrose House to be dissolved

The Friends of Montrose House group is to be dissolved.

The decision was made at a committee meeting - their first face-to-face gathering since February last year.

The Friends of Montrose House hosts an annual summer fete to raise funds for the Brodick care home and has in years past made itself available to support the organisation in any way it is able to.

In addition to providing various forms of assistance to Montrose House residents and staff, the group also provided financial support for service-users and staff who fell outside the budget for the home and the Stronach Day Service.

John Lauder, who has been involved with the Friends for a number of years, said: 'After a great deal of heart searching, we have reluctantly come to the unanimous decision that the Friends no longer serves the purpose for which it was set up in 2000.

'This decision has not come easily, and is taken with great reluctance, but the group has for some time agreed that changed circumstances and the advancing years of the members involved have seen this inevitably being the only way forward.'

Meeting

A special general meeting will be convened at St Bride's Church hall, Brodick, on Monday November 22, at 2pm at which the Friends will propose to seek approval to officially dissolve the group. This meeting will be open to the public and everyone is invited to attend.

Views sought on Merkland Forest redevelopment plan

by Colin Smeeton editor@arranbanner.co.uk

Forestry and Land Scotland (FLS) is inviting Arran residents to have a say on redevelopment and management plans for Merkland Forest.

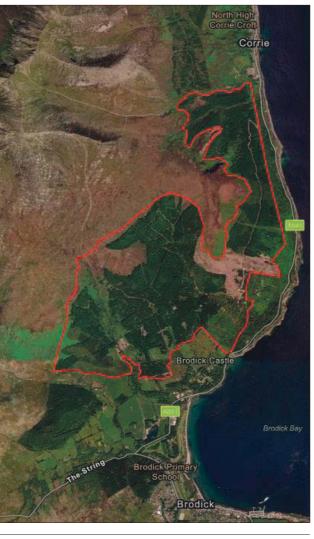

Falling under the proposed Merkland Land Management Plan, Merkland Forest covers an area of 681ha and lies just to the north of Brodick.

It features prominently in the iconic view of Goatfell as well as from the Brodick seafront.

The Merkland Land Management Plan sets out a 10-year plan for the site which mostly involves the removal of larch trees affected by or at risk from tree disease Phytophtora ramorum.

Andy Walker, FLS forester on Arran, said: 'Merkland is a mixed conifer plantation associated with the designed landscape of Brodick Castle and is important for biodiversity and for recreation. It's also important for timber production.

'Phytophthora ramorum is now widespread, unfortunatley, and we will need to carry out major felling of larch over the next five years. It will have a huge impact on the forest but will ultimately improve

Visiting resumes at Ayr and Crosshouse hospitals

Friends and family can now visit patients at University Hospitals Avr and Crosshouse, NHS Avrshire and Arran has confirmed. Last month the two acute hospitals suspended all - except in essential cases visits to prevent the spread of Covid and to protect patients and staff.

The restrictions were extended at the start of this month to Wednesday October 20.

Each patient will now be able to have one designated visitor per day.

This applies to all areas of the hospitals, except Covid wards or any ward experiencing an outbreak of Covid. In these areas, essential visiting will continue University Hospital Crosshouse is again allowing pre-arranged visitors to the wards.

Visitors are requested to contact the ward to arrange a visit and any visitors who have not booked will not be accommodated. This is to allow social distancing measures to be maintained.

Guidance on all visiting arrangements can be found on the NHS Ayrshire and Arran website at www.nhsaaa.net/ hospitals/visiting-restrictions/. Virtual visiting by video link will also continue to be available at all sites the health of the trees and the woodland overall.

'However, the substantial work we have to do also gives us an opportunity to redesign the forest to make it more resilient in years to come and to enhance its visual amenity in the landscape and for local people and visitors and allows us to continue with sustainable timber production.

'We would like to hear the view of residents so would invite anyone interested to look over the plans online and give us feedback on them at their leisure.⁵

The online consultation will remain open until Sunday December 5 2021.

A further consultation will take place next year once initial feedback is assessed and firm proposals for the site will be drawn up.

COP26 or cop out?

While many may view COP26 as yet another talking shop where world leaders signal their green credentials while flying to Glasgow in their private jets, wining-and-dining and achieving little, there are others that are placing a great deal of hope and optimism in the outcome of the meetings.

Supporters and detractors can both agree on one thing though, and that is governments around the world all need to find a combined solution to the problems being faced rather than individual efforts of varying degrees.

The overwhelming feeling being expressed by many environmental groups and organisations is that empty words and broken promises will no longer suffice.

And, whether you believe that the world is nearing a tipping point, verging on the precipice of an ecological and climatic disaster, or if you believe that this is climate alarmism, COP26 has been billed by many as the 'last chance' to make a difference.

There can also be no doubt the great expectations on world leaders this year will not be quelled by empty gestures and political machinations as in previous years. People are expecting governments to show their mettle and make meaningful commitments to combat climate change.

Will COP 26 achieve this? Will COP26 be the progenitor of real change or just a cop out?

Green fundamentalists

Sir. When all political parties - and even the Royal family - agree on something, you can be pretty sure they are wrong. It is therefore particularly useful that some of the follies of green fundamentalism are being exposed just before the great Glasgow self-righteousness fest which is COP26.

Consider, the green decision to rein-in gas and oil exploration in the North Sea, and to oppose commissioning of the new fields which have (even so) been discovered. The result: a shortage of oil and gas, meaning that Britain's fuel security is now in the hands of Putin's Russia, and coal-fired electricity generation was restarted last month. A big win for 'green-ness'?

Even a formerly positive local authority in England has been bullied into opposing development of a coking-coal mine. This would produce coal as an essential ingredient in steel. The alternative would be to import the coal from Australia or the steel from China. Very green.

Meanwhile, the relentless drive for expensive, unreliable energy in Britain, whether wind or nuclear, makes British manufacturing less competitive, driving more of it to China, which continues to build coal-fired electricity generation capacity at pace.

More than half of Chinese energy production is from coal, and it is adding coal-fired capacity at three times the rest of the world combined. The green extremists are making matters worse, by their own measures.

The most beautiful example of green nonsense is the fact that the UK government currently subsidises attempts to reduce the production of carbon dioxide - and the production of carbon dioxide.

More than 25,000 people are expected for the great hypocrisy-gathering next month, and not all of them will have travelled here on foot. Of Sad indictment Sir.

Last week, on Monday October 18, a Radio 2 listener told Ken Bruce on air that they were going to have a break on the beautiful Isle of Arran, usually great publicity for the island, but on this occasion not so much as Ken Bruce said: 'If the ferry sails and you get there.

Word is getting out across the UK and further afield that Scotland's ferry services to the Western and Clyde islands are in chaos.

If there is not to be irreparable further damage to the economies of our islands the Scottish Government has to get rid of the present management of CalMac, remove CMAL altogether and appoint managers that have an understanding of running lifeline ferry services.

There also needs to be a complete clear out of the ineffective managers hired by the hapless Drummond and return to having the customer at the forefront of the running of the company,

It says that: 'The largest industry in the Scottish economy (as is true elsewhere in the UK) is owner-occupiers unknowingly letting their own houses to themselves

This is due to what they dub the 'imputed rental of owner occupiers'.

So on Arran does the income from tourists exceed the rental income that the powers that be suppose is coming from home owners renting their homes to themselves? I'd love to know.

In any case it shows how bonkers the housing market is.

It's long forgotten now but David Cameron's government's housing adviser promised house price stability. That went well, didn't it.

I agree with Tom Tracey, its time to build council housing. Plenty of land is for sale on Arran - give North Ayrshire Council the cash to snap it up. Yours,

Old Brodick pier

Last week's Banner featured a public notice calling for observations (limited to safety and environmental issues) on the proposed demolition of the old pier.

There are several safety reasons why demolition should be resisted.

First, the old pier is no threat to berthing, and with modest investment it could be brought into standby use.

Second, should the new berths become inoperable for any reason (strikes, mechanical failures, construction faults, damage), the whole port would become inoperable, meaning that people could not get to hospital appointments and supplies could not be brought in.

Third, retaining the old pier would also allow alternative services to operate, for example, when the Caledonian Isles and ferry terminal are overwhelmed on the day of the Brodick Highland Games; already, the Waverley was unable to berth when two CalMac vessels occupied the new berths.

Lastly, the inflexibility of the new berths might make Brodick unusable as a safe port should vessels in the Clyde fall into distress; the old pier would provide extra flexibility.

Yours. Eamonn Butler. Lamlash.

Government launches Impact of Fireworks campaign

As we all look forward to November 5 and fireworks night, the Scottish Government has launched a campaign to ensure people are aware of new regulations relating to the use of fireworks.

New laws mean it is illegal to set off fireworks before 6pm and after 11pm. The law allows for an extension until midnight on November 5 and lam on Hogmanay, Chinese New Year and Diwali.

The new rules aim to lessen the negative impact of fireworks on people and animals. Fiona Clarke, an autistic person living in Scotland, has supported the campaign.

She said: 'Visually fireworks can be a sensory delight and portray celebration, but for some of us, the noise, flashes of light, together with the unpredictable nature of how long they will go on for, can be overwhelming.

'I think this campaign is very important in raising awareness of the negative impact that fireworks can have on others and encouraging people to be more mindful of that.

If you plan on having your own private firework display this year it is important that you know the rules and how to keep you and your family safe.

Statistics show that during the bonfire season, 85 per cent of all firework injuries treated at emergency departments happen at informal private displays. More than half of those requiring treatment are children.

So make sure you keep a safe distance - not all fireworks are suitable for private use. It de-

Deputy assistant chief officer Alasdair Perry is the Scottish Fire and Rescue Service's head of prevention and protection.

He said: 'We welcome the continuing support of our communities and by following all the available safety guidance from ourselves, and our partners, they can help reduce the risk of harm wherever possible.

'Every year people are injured by bonfires and fireworks and admitted to hospital - and children are particularly affected.

'Anyone thinking of hosting a private event involving fire, flame or fireworks is asked to consider the risks - follow the fireworks code and fire safety guidance.'

If you are planning a private fireworks display, let your neighbours know when you might be setting fireworks off.

For some of your neighbours, fireworks can be particularly distressing and frightening due to the loud and sudden noise. Many neighbourhood pets will also be distressed from the loud and sudden noise.

Scottish SPCA head of education, policy and research Gilly Mendes Ferreira said: 'Every vear thousands of animals suffer stress and anxiety caused by the use of fireworks.

'As animals have more acute hearing than humans, the loud and high pitched noises made by fireworks can cause animals to become fearful and distressed. Animals can panic bang and this can lead them towards danger such as being

Remember, remember... the impact of fireworks

New rules have been introduced to lessen the negative impact of fireworks, meaning it's illegal to set off fireworks before 6pm and after 11pm. This extends to midnight on 5th November and 1am on Hogmanay. Chinese New Year and Diwali.

While fireworks can be great fun, they can be dangerous if used incorrectly. During bonfire season, 85% of all firework injuries treated at emergency departments happen at private displays, and more than half of those requiring treatment are children.

Mortars and rockets are responsible for the majority of serious eye and hand injuries, however sparklers, fountains and firecrackers are also frequent sources of injury.

It's safest to celebrate at an organised event if there's one in your area, but if you're planning a private display at home, make sure you know how to keep you and your family safe:

- Keep a safe distance
- · Follow the fireworks code and read instructions before use
- Not all fireworks are suitable for private use. •
- It depends on the size of your garden
- Visit www.firescotland.gov.uk for more safety advice

It's important to think of others and be aware of the impact fireworks can have on those around you. The loud and sudden noises can be distressing for those with noise sensitivity, including autistic people and veterans, and pet owners know only too well the distress they can cause animals.

> Enjoy fireworks safely. For more advice visit www.firescotland.gov.uk attend.

With the onset of colder nights and the evenings drawing in, and the clocks going back this weekend, it can only mean one thing - it's time for Hallowe'en and bonfire night celebrations!

On Arran, we are particularly fortunate that a large number of villages are hosting celebrations. And, these are not just confined to one evening, but they will be held over two week's, giving fans of Hallowe'en and bonfires numerous opportunities to attend one, or more, event.

Nearing the big day itself, Lamlash Primary will host their party, on Friday 29^{th,} (today) going towards next year's fireworks, instead of an entrance fee, would be welcomed, so keep a look out for the yellow hats going round. Everyone is then invited back to Brodick Golf Club where soup and sausage rolls will be available.

Not just a bonfire night, Lochranza and Catacol Village Hall and Lochranza Centre CIC are combining resources to bring you the Northend Festival of Fire. This will be their third year organising this event. The castle and the village green will be the focal points for most of the events in what should be a fantastic evening for visitors. There will be a traditional bonfire, lit to the sound of the Isle of Arran Pipe Band. Fireworks will be set off on the road leading to Lochranza Castle and the Arran Mobile Disco will provide music on the village green during the fireworks display. The evening will continue with a family dance in the village with a licensed bar from 8.30pm until 10.30pm. Attendees will be able to dance the night away to the sounds of the Sound Cradle Band.

Rare Scottish visitors spotted on Arran during migration season

Considered by some to be the most attractive of our wintering geese, the brent goose is small, not much bigger than the familiar mallard.

There are three recognised sub-species of this goose and all breed in the high Arctic and are circumpolar.

Brent geese nest on the boggy Arctic tundra, where the severe climate allows them only about two months of good weather in which to raise a family.

By September, they are leaving their breeding grounds and heading for their wintering areas where they spend the winter feeding on eelgrass in estuaries and on crops in adjoining fields.

Two of these subspecies winter in considerable numbers on the British Isles. The dark-bellied brent geese breed in northern Russia and spend the winter in southern and eastern England while the pale-bellied brent geese breed mostly in Canada and Greenland and spend the winter mostly in Ireland.

It is estimated that around 90,000 dark-bellied brent geese travel to Britain each autumn from their nesting grounds in Siberia, wintering in the sheltered estuaries and coastal marshes on the east and south coasts of England. It is also estimated that around 30,000 pale-bellied brent geese arrive in Strangford Lough in Northern Ireland in October before dispersing to other estuarine sites in Ireland. In Scotland it is a scarce passage migrant and uncommon winter visitor.

The most likely subspecies to be seen on Arran is the pale-breasted. Looking at the data in the Arran Natural Brent geese are an uncommon visitor to Arran, however, there have been three sightings reported this year. Photograph: Colin Cowley History Society annual bird reports, in seven out of the last 10 years brent geese have been reported on Arran with the largest group being 31 in Machrie Bay in April 2017.

Looking at only the autumn records, brent geese have been reported on Arran in just three of the last 10 years with the largest group being four by Fisherman's Walk in 2016.

That is until this year. In September there have been three reports: two birds by the Fisherman's Walk on 24th and one on Torrylinn shore also on 24th and six on the shore at Thunderguy on 29th. Our photograph, taken by Colin Cowley, captures the main features of this small goose, the black head and neck, the grey-brown back, the pale belly and the small white neck patch.

Look out for it round our coast this winter.

Enjoy your birding and keep safe.

Please send any bird notes with 'what, when, where' to me at Kilpatrick Kennels, Kilpatrick, Blackwaterfoot, KA27 8EY, or email me at jim@arranbirding.co.uk I look forward to hearing from you. Cod populations in the Clyde reach lowest levels ever

The Our Seas alliance has warned that west coast cod populations have collapsed and that Scottish Government protection measures offer little protection or chance of the population ever recovering.

population ever recovering. The stark warning from the alliance representing marine businesses, community groups, Scottish fishing associations and environmental and recreational groups comes after the Scottish Government's review of protective measures for Clyde cod stocks.

It has come under fire from campaigners as offering no protection from the activities that are most likely to harm cod's spawning grounds.

Our Seas said the last year saw the lowest adult populations of west of Scotland cod ever recorded and scientists have advised that no cod are caught from the west coast stock in 2022.

The protection measures being criticised include an area of the Firth of Clyde which is temporarily closed every year so that theoretically cod can breed undisturbed.

However, exemptions mean certain methods of fishing can continue uninterrupted, including bottom-trawling and scallop dredging.

Bottom-trawling and dredging rake across the seabed in areas that are supposed to be closed and which contain essential fish habitat for spawning cod, yet the Scottish Government currently allows for bottom-towed fishing gear to operate in the area they are trying to protect.

Ailsa McLellan, co-ordinator of the Our Seas coalition, said; 'These measures are clearly not working. This is one of many examples of the Scottish Government talking a good game with respect to marine and fisheries management, whilst failing to do anything effective to improve the situation.

'Catch limits are continually set above scientific advice and there is no monitoring or enforcement of the ban on discards.

'It is known that the Nephrops trawl fleet catches and discards a significant number of cod as bycatch.'

Closer to home, Jenny Crockett, outreach and communications manager for Community of Arran Seabed Trust Arran, which is also a member of Our Seas coalition, said: 'Fisheries management measures tend to focus on controlling the amount of fish caught and technical fishing gear measures that support this. Although these measures are important, protecting habitats that are crucial to the life history of the target fish must be a more prominent part of the overall approach for fisheries management.

'Research is showing the crucial role of seabed habitat in supporting early life stages of fish such as cod and that the biodiversity of the seabed affects the abundance and growth of juvenile demersal fish.

'It is therefore time for the Scottish Government to address fisheries protection in the Clyde with an ecosystem-based approach to protect essential habitats, such as cod spawning grounds.'

Our Seas coalition is calling for the urgent reinstatement of an inshore limit on the use of bottom-towed fishing gear around Scotland's coasts to halt and reverse the damage done to habitats, carbon sinks and fisheries by prawn trawling and scallop dredging.

Kicking off Hallowe'en with Pumpkin Patch at the Park

Arran's first autumn event hosted by Whiting Bay Primary School Parent Council was a resounding success with hundreds of people attending its Pumpkin Patch at the Park event last Sunday.

Raising more than $\pounds 2,500$, the family event attracted a huge number of adults and children to Sandbraes park where organisers offered a number of Hallowe'enthemed activities for the attendees to enjoy.

On offer for children were a number of games including bobbing for apples, a witches' hat toss and a poke-the-pumpkin game, all offering sweet treats as prizes.

Children also enjoyed face painting and selecting their own pumpkins from the pumpkin patch, along with impromptu games that took place in the park with their friends.

Adults joined in the family fun by making scarecrows which were entered into a scarecrow competition and which were all on display in the park.

In addition to the baking and snack stalls, there were hearty soups and warming hot chocolate. A volunteer auction also took place with visitors bidding for the services of volunteers. A Whiting Bay Primary Parent Council spokesperson said: 'We would like to wholeheartedly thank everyone, island-wide, for coming to see us at Sandbraes park. Such a happy buzz of people. A truly great afternoon and we raised more than £2,500.

'Congratulations to all the raffle winners, the auction bidders and to the Furze family for their winning scarecrow. Thanks also to Liz at the Brodick Co-op for her incredible generosity and for supporting the event.'

Hockey ladies succumb to island all-comers' efforts

The Senior Ladies of the Arran Hockey Club faced tough but friendly opposition in last Saturday's friendly match against all-comers.

The match took place after the Senior Ladies issued an open invite to any players wanting to play against them following the match cancellation by Strathclyde University who were unable to field a team.

Many of the opposition players took part in a similar friendly match two weeks before and were keen for a victory after they were soundly defeated by the Senior Ladies 5-2.

This time, the tables were turned and the all-comers scored two goals while the Senior Ladies could only blast one goal past the goal keeper, despite numerous attempts.

The match was immensely physical with players from both sides making repeated attempts at goal but by the time the final whistle was blown, the all-comers were in the lead and secured the victory. A spokesperson for the Senior Ladies thanked Pauline Reid and Cat Galbraith for umpiring and all of the players who provided them with valuable practise and a challenging but enjoyable game. The Senior Ladies will play an away game this weekend against GHK 4 who also field a team in the West District league.
